

1

SSG Realizes That Humanity Must Be Customers, Not Slaves

Zoosh through Robert Shapiro
October 17, 21 and 24, 1996

[On October 15 due to interference the channeling had to be postponed and the following is an explanation of that interference.]

Temporary Warping Due to Arrival of Teachers Helping Negative Sirians

There is a serious interference with a bending of light rays. In this area light rays are bending to accommodate the arrival of certain beings who will assist in the evolution of the beings [negative Sirians] now in occupation and assimilation at the 3.0 dimension. The point of entrance of these beings is about 25 miles due north of here. It is causing a warping, a curving bend of light rays, which is causing some unintentional interference tonight.

Apologies to those who have gathered, but this warpage of the light rays should be over within fourteen hours. Certain individuals might have a little difficulty maintaining connection with their physical self during this time, and this can cause a wide variety of symptoms—everything from exhaustion, headache—what are basically annoying discomforts, distraction.

When did it start?

It really started about three and one-half days ago, but has built to its most powerful level about an hour and a half ago. It will maintain that level of intensity for another three or four hours, then drop off rapidly.

Who are the beings?

These beings are teachers of light who have adapted themselves to work with beings who are essentially rather negative in character. This means that the teachers must arrive greatly expanded, then reduce themselves on their way through the temporary veil between where you are now and the 3.0 beings. As they reduce themselves, it creates an equal and opposite energy reaction, meaning that as they get smaller, the outward energy becomes more impactful, not unlike the reaction in an atomic detonation, where the energy implodes before expanding. This is basically a law of light physics, so it's still in operation in this part of the universe and something that cannot be helped. It is for a good cause, but it happens to coincide with this evening's channeling. It will affect different people in different ways. It might actually make some people feel better. But it creates a difficulty in channeling.

The negative Sirians who were here bothering the people on the planet—when that planet recently exploded, did they leave and go to 3.0? Or are they still milling around here?

They're still milling around here. They are being cajoled to move toward 3.0, but they won't do it on their own, so an interesting program has been developed. Authorization has been made to segregate these beings, move them to a place of their own underground and initiate them sufficiently so that they can function as what I would call teachers' aides. They have been told that they cannot go with you and that if they try to stay where they are as you move on dimensionally, they will simply be destroyed. Thus their choice was either destruction (which they wouldn't choose intentionally) or initiation—sort of conversion by the sword. They have naturally chosen conversion by the sword. To do this they have to give up a great deal of their discomfoting energy and in the process a lot of their competition. As you know, competition, although you have found good uses for it, is basically associated with discomfort.

They are now assembled in a location not too far from the outer edges of the icecap of the North Pole, from where they are being very slowly and gently moved to a position in space about 182,000 miles from Earth (but not where the Moon is). From there they will be refracted using light to the 3.0 dimension and held there in stasis for about thirty days, during which they will be treated by the lightbeings to reduce and transform that extra discomfoting energy. Then they will be linked to certain light-producing phenomena not unlike a star, through which their energy will gradually be transmuted in about another 45 days to something equivalent to perhaps 1½% to 1¾% discomfoting energy. They need that much to relate to the other individuals from that now-deceased planet from Sirius. In this way they will then be able to assist their people and also assist the lightbeings who are coming to teach them. By experiencing this transformational process, they will understand how the process works.

How many beings are there?

I should think no more than 30,000, give or take a dozen or two.

So they're going to be totally gone, along with all the annoying little things they've been doing?

They will be totally gone from your planet in about a day and a half. They are now gathered up near the North Pole.

All right!

This is not to say that you won't still have some things going on here, but they will not be the cause—not directly, anyway.

Understand that these things happen from time to time. I might add that part of the reason you had the tape difficulty was because the energy was being warped somewhat nearby. There was a refraction that impacted a very narrow corridor along this house, and it affected various other magnetic happenings as well. For example, there were an unusual number of power surges around the Earth during this time. I don't think much equipment was ruined, but a few computers crashed, unfortunately. These things happen.

Recent SSG Rebel Decision to Loose Chupacabras

What would you like to say for the magazine regarding the secret government—what they're doing, what we're facing at their hands for the next couple of months?

You've got some rebels running around out there. Some people within the inner circle of the sinister secret government want to just wait and see what happens, which is prudent. But as is often the case in an organization, especially a highly organized criminal organization, there's always a few loose cannons. A couple of beings involved in your basic loose-cannon operation recently made a decision to release some hybrid beings, which is designed to cause a little panic in the population.

Now, for some time there have been a few (not many) beings similar to this running around on the surface, but mostly they have been unable to access the surface very well, so their comings and goings have been infrequent. But now a few of these beings have been released to the surface. Sometimes they're called the goatsuckers, sometimes chupacabras.

Yes. You've already talked about that.

We talked about this already?

You said they were from the second dimension and they were looking for sheep to find their history.

Yes, but I also have to tell you that there's a variation of those beings now that have been released within the past eight months, and these beings are truly lost. This means that their genetic substance has been altered and they have been placed within an environment that is incorrect for them. They amount to a combination of several beings, and this genetically altered being cannot survive for more than a couple of years. They are highly manipulated through dimensional portals. I just want people to know, if they hear stories like this, that this is a being made up of several parts (some of which are ET, none of which is human) and that other beings, perhaps a little wiser, will pull these beings out of this reality.

How soon?

I should think within a year and a half. It might take awhile because they're constantly being pulled into dimensional overlays where it's hard to find them.

Where specifically are they coming from? Where were they created?

They were created down in the southern tip of South America. They have been released in one case several miles north of Buenos Aires, one up near Venezuela and several in Mexico. And one or two are occasionally being released throughout the Southwest desert. But I don't think that heavily populated places will see these beings because the more people there are around, the more likely people will see them. This is really designed by the rebel force of the sinister secret government to create fear, which is their number-one marketing tool, as you know. This rebel sect's whole idea is, How can we grab power? If you looked at them as warlords, you wouldn't be too far from an application of their identity. But you also have to understand that the inner circle of the sinister secret government is inclined to take a liberal view, meaning that if it's successful and creates more money for them, then they'll say, fine.

If it turns out that people just become more lackadaisical about exposure to unusual beings (which will prepare you for contact with true ETs), then the secret government will consider it a disastrous failure and terminate the project on their own (they've given it maybe two and a half years to sink or swim). And they will also probably terminate the rebel members of the sinister secret government. If necessary, they are willing to terminate members of their own inner circle, and they have the capacity to do so. No member of the inner circle is entirely safe because they have built into their physical selves a means by which, if all the other members focus entirely on a certain thought (I won't say what) accompanied by a certain feeling (I also won't say what) and direct it toward these members, no amount of shielding can protect them.

Have they ever done that?

No, they haven't, but they have the capacity. This is actually a bastardization of ET technology.

But why are these beings so similar? Have they deliberately created them to be similar to the second-dimensional beings in Puerto Rico?

Yes. They've created that intentionally so that they can say, "Look, these beings are real. They have a history." You understand? They don't even have to say it; others will say it for them. They'll say, "Oh, they started here and here they are. They're spreading." The whole idea is to suggest that they're spreading.

But they definitely have no connection to those second-dimensional beings that we talked about?

That's right. They do not have a direct connection.

Are they dangerous to humans? I mean, what if a human sees them? What's the smartest thing to do?

If a human sees them it's best to give them distance and be reasonably confident. For what it's worth, you probably cannot bring one down with a bullet, so don't try. But they are susceptible to electric shock. Nevertheless, I don't think you'll be able to do it. The best thing to do is to just look at them. If you need to go somewhere, back up. Keep looking at them, don't turn your back.

Are they third-dimensional?

They're not really . . .

You said they're interdimensional.

Well, they're not interdimensional. They're being pulled in and out of interdimensional portals by the secret government, but that doesn't mean that they're interdimensional. Just be aware that they are being manipulated. They are in that sense victims, though I don't like to promote the use of that word. Nevertheless, that's the situation here. Any tastes they might have for animal blood is purely acculturated and not part of their true existence within the separate beings that they are.

It's like creating a Halloween character. They want people to be afraid of them.

That's exactly what it is.

SSG Manipulating U.S. Government to Equalize Prices with World Prices

We've been getting so much literature about boxcars with chains built into them and big warehouses in the middle of the country that say they're Sam's Club but are really full of arms. Are they preparing for some of this melodrama that we heard of years ago in terms of controlling the citizens?

Let's just say this: Most of the legitimate government people have no idea that they're being manipulated by these beings, but there are elements within the sinister secret government that have put out to legitimate governmental circles the idea that if certain changes are made (in the United States, not so much in other countries), the citizens of the United States won't stand for it and would pose a true threat by defending their rights and becoming militant organizations. This is because the citizens of the United States have been raised on the mother's milk of revolution (meaning the Revolutionary War); even the Civil War has been so glorified that the idea of fighting for some just cause is almost spoon-fed to students from grade school on up. By the time you get to college you get more of a world-view. So there are these individuals who are saying, "If we do this, then this will happen, so we must be prepared."

Now, the changes would be, for starters, an equalization of certain worldwide phenomena. For instance, gasoline per gallon in this country is unusually cheap (not counting other countries that might subsidize it, such as Mexico). In Europe, for example, gasoline costs significantly more, sometimes twice as much or more. You might have a cartel that wishes to say, "Okay, we're now on an international economic system!" For what it's worth, the international corporate powers do not represent one religion or nationalistic group; please get that thought out of your head. When you let yourself be manipulated by that idea, you're absolutely tools and toadies of the sinister secret government. International corporations are really in a position right now (as anyone can see, looking at the consolidation of banks) to create an international, unified economic society.

I've said for a long time that the initial world order will be based on the corporate system. Well, they're really very much in power to do that. The interesting thing is that at the top of corporations right now (aside from their desire to make money) there is some sense of responsibility to the citizenry at large, believe it or not. I'm not trying to glorify corporations and say they are God's gift to the world, but there is some sense in many corporations that they've got to look after the people. It's a bit of a mini-government in itself.

Getting back to their goals, there is a pretty fair chance (40%) that there will be a real move toward having things cost the same in all places where corporations are. They are in fact creating an international economic model. This might rule out places like Cuba and China somewhat, particularly Cuba, because they are genuinely independent. China is a little more involved in free trade with the world and Cuba with part of the world. We're looking at the intent to fix prices.

Expect Rising Gas Prices but More Jobs in Next Three Years

Now, the government of the United States will resist blatant price-fixing. But they're disinclined to do too much about price-fixing when it comes to products that are seen by the public as being essential, such as gasoline. I'm not saying to run out and buy a hundred gallons of gas and store it in your garage, but the chances of fuel prices going up significantly (over two dollars a gallon) within the next two or three years are quite strong in the U.S., because this represents a true cost, from the international corporate point of view. These corporations are going to pool their money in some places, not to save the poor, but to create a price based on what the item actually costs. In Europe you've got a significant profit built in that is designed to motivate corporations to find more oil, at least on the theoretical economic level. In this country, because of a certain degree of competition, prices are lower.

You might ask, "Is there any product where the price is going to go down?" I'd have to say that this is probably not the case. However, corporations are becoming increasingly sensitive to the idea that by creating a class of very poor people, you're creating people who can't afford to pay for their products. So corporations will begin to find means to get people off the welfare rolls and into jobs that pay better. Right now there's resistance to the minimum wage, especially from smaller businesses. Places of business will automate even more, and you'd be surprised how little resistance there will be to it. As a matter of fact, people might like it because it seems modern and exciting. There will be fewer people working at places, more people available in the work pool and more work found for them to do.

Basically, the international corporate model for the world order has been coming on for a while, and within the next two and a half years it will be locked in. So even if you have a government that is strongly connected to the church or a philosophy or even a government that is autocratic, you will still have to experience the corporate model of world society.

Understand that right now as I speak, the United Nations, which I perceive as a primarily benevolent organization, is a model for what can be done that is good through a corporate-modeled organization. The United Nations is basically a good thing, although it is involved in entirely too many so-called police actions. I don't think the United Nations really makes war very well, but they do make peace well.

SSG Will Eventually Stop Involvement in Drugs

The sinister secret government now is primarily involved in making sure that their slice of the pie is large and in acknowledging that even though they control and manipulate legitimate businesses and corporations, at some point (and they're understanding this now) they're going to have to step back and say, "We can't manipulate things any longer. We can't create a class of drug addicts who are highly damaging to persons and property." The irony here is that the sinister secret government has such a large stake in the affairs of human beings now that they are at the point where they will withdraw all of their efforts toward making quick cash through the sale of drugs either by manipulation or taking a percentage. And they're going to come down hard on those who are involved in this.

Marijuana is going to be legalized. Just face it and understand that heroin, crack cocaine and drugs such as that that lead to violence (either because of what they release within an individual or because the individual has a habit that has to be fed) will be targeted for elimination. Certain things that are considered scientifically as being nondestructive will be allowed, and marijuana isn't destructive (though it is psychologically and emotional addictive) if you don't have other drugs to move on to. You will have marijuana that you can smoke or consume in some way that will be mildly impacting—not hashish, though. They're going to outlaw that. And they're not going to be mister nice guy, like law and order. If you're caught growing or distributing drugs, you just disappear! It will be a crime like that. It's going to be something the sinister secret government or highly organized crime will simply eliminate.

This is going to happen probably in your lifetimes, probably within the next 20 to 25 years. There are a lot of would-be chemists out there who will try to reproduce stuff. But once the sinister secret government and organized crime withdraw their energy from it and say, "We've got to put a stop to this, because we're so involved in legitimate business and legitimate corporations that this is hurting us. We're shooting ourselves in the foot every time we deal drugs, and we can't tolerate it from anybody!" And that's going to be the end of it, with the exception of marijuana. You might say that is a benefit.

The sinister secret government is still going to be in power in 25 years?

SSG to Fade Away and Join the Legitimate System to Make More Money

No, no, no. The sinister secret government is going to gradually fade out of existence because what you've known as the sinister secret government will not so much be uncreated as gradually come into the system. Understand that the best way to involve people in something more benevolent than they're currently involved in is to bring them into the system. And the sinister secret government somewhat unintentionally has brought itself into the system by becoming highly involved in legitimate corporations.

And banks.

I don't want to single out banks—legitimate corporations, and I'm not going to say which ones. I'm just going to say that organized crime has been doing this for some time, and highly organized crime (in the form of the sinister secret government), even loosely organized crime and up-and-coming gangs, are getting involved in legitimate corporations because they find they can make more money. The curious thing is that the minute they get involved in legitimate businesses, they eventually become disinclined to be involved in illegitimate businesses because they can see that this is actually harming profits. This isn't because of morals; it's a monetary decision. The sinister secret government is at that point now. Even organized crime is very much at that point now. I'm not saying highly organized crime and organized crime are your friends; they're not. But highly organized crime (the sinister secret government) and organized crime (that you know and understand) are past the 50% mark in recognizing it. The gangs will be the last, but they will follow. If they don't, they will cease to exist. So they will follow for their own best interests. Thus ends our lecture on the criminal conspiracy for the evening.

Personal Weapons Will Fade; Other Changes

So all of these contingencies about rebels probably won't make it into this reality where they'll come door to door and take your weapons and herd you into railroad cars?

I don't think it will come to that. I think that people are gradually being conditioned that personal weapons are unsafe. And in all honesty guns have only one purpose. I understand that this society is based on a revolution, aside from being based on colonizing. And in a revolutionary colonial system the tendency is to want to be armed for various justified reasons. But within 20 to 25 years at most, personal ownership in this country (though borders will be more blurred in the future) of any weapon shorter than thirty inches is unlikely. You'll still be able to fight with swords (those people who are interested in that). And you'll still be able to do target shooting with rifles at some point, but the chances that there will be an allowance for private ownership of handguns or concealable knives is highly unlikely. If you look around the rest of the world, you'll see that that's the tendency if not already the fact.

Some people have said, "The people will revolt if these changes come," but I don't think that's the case. And I'll also say, for what it's worth, that a lot of fear about "what if" is only fear. Some of it is based on misperceptions, some on gossip and some on scare stories. Probably the bulk of it is based on misinformation—things that were not understood clearly.

So yes, you're going to go through some changes, especially in this country, some of which you won't like, but you will adapt to them. For starters, look at your debt! It's going to have to be paid off at some point, you know. A major gasoline tax—twenty cents per gallon—would go a long way to pay off that debt. I'm not expecting large groups of people in the United States or its protectorates to be rounded up and herded into camps. I'm not expecting this for political or nationalistic or racial purposes. I know there are some people who fear that the United States wants to build machine gun towers at its borders. I think that's a temporary backlash that looks like it will happen. I do think that borders will be beefed up, but it's not so much to keep people from leaving the country, so don't worry about that. I do think that you will see a little bit more policing, but I'm not expecting concentration camps in this country or even DP (displaced persons) camps. I don't think it's going to happen. There are some people making contingency plans just in case, but anybody who's been in the military or the police or even politics knows that large organizations are always making contingency plans. I don't want to give it much energy and I hope you won't, either.

Weather

Okay. On a different topic, will there be more snowstorms and blizzards in the next six months?

Are you asking, "Is it going to be a long, hard winter?"

Yes.

I don't think it will be any worse than any winter you've experienced in the past ten years. There will be places that will have some major snowstorms, so if you can buy heating oil now, buy it because it's a little cheaper now. I'm expecting an unusually mild winter in some places and a fairly severe winter in other places, but I'm not going to go on record too much. You'll probably have some pretty good storms in the Northeast, so be prepared. Lay in a good supply of heating oil and go ahead and buy that down jacket. But I am not expecting a bone-crushing, hundred-year winter.

War, New Religions and an African Land Grab

All right. What about the war situation? Is it going to go on as it is, or are we going to have a lot more little incidents—or what?

You'd be surprised at the pressure to stop the war in the Middle East. As a matter of fact, it's so strong that the United States was secretly (not publicly) highly criticized for its recent missile attack on Iraq, even though one might easily justify it. That's how strong the worldwide pressure is for peace in the Middle East—or at least the absence of a shooting war. I think you'll find that the full power of the United Nations (including the United States, perhaps reluctantly) will force Israel back to the peace table and to the original agreements. And if Israel does not comply, U.N. troops will come in to defend the Palestinians and everybody else. No one, certainly not the world corporate model, is going to stand for going backward, not in a place that produces such vast amounts of the world oil and has vast oil reserves.

It is also a place that will be the staging ground for certain new religions. I can't say too much about that now, but I want you to make a note of that: staging ground for new religions—Middle East. I'm not saying that any of the religions in that area will be eliminated, but that there will be zero tolerance for going backward in the peace accords there. So Israeli government, be aware, and if you haven't already noticed, if you think your citizens are marching in the streets right now to protest decisions to return to the warring days of yore with the Palestinians and others in the area, you haven't seen anything yet! Get ready for country-wide strikes and student demonstrations the likes of which you've never seen, because the people are not going to tolerate backward motion.

You mean war?

That's right. Backward motion would be war. You see, those who are in power now are basically fundamentalist. Believe it or not, you don't have to be involved in Islam or Christianity to be fundamentalist—there are fundamentalist Jewish, too. They are in power, and there is not going to be any tolerance for that. Nor will there be any tolerance for wars in the Middle East in general. The U.N.'s going to come down hard on that. In five years people will no longer be shooting at each other. That power exists.

What else? Skirmishes in Africa? This is probably going to go on for a time. (This is a sad situation we've talked about in Origins and the Next 50 Years of the Explorer Race that will be released at some point in the near future.) People on a semicorporate level who wish to make a land grab in Africa are encouraging warfare there. I think the U.N. is also going to step in and the corporate model is going to put a stop to that within the next two and a half years. The reason is largely because of vast (even today) mineral, oil and coal deposits. They can't be having wars when they're attempting to mine and improve the quality of life for the local people. Of course, they won't honor the tribal customs except scholastically, by studying them, but they will attempt to improve the lives of the people by twentieth-century standards.

I don't want to sound as if I'm waving the flag for the international corporate model, but understand that this first world order that works on the practical economic business level is a lead-in to the more benevolent world government to follow. It has to start there because that's what people can understand.

So the old practice of the secret government arming both sides of a battle to create sales of weapons and go back and build it up afterward, that's over?

No, no. I'm not saying that's over; I'm saying it's drawing to a close. Just like the sale of drugs to make quick money is also drawing to a close.

That's wonderful.

The Corporate Profit Motive Will Raise Quality of Life

Ultimately any corporation knows that if it wants people to buy its products, they have to be alive; and they have to be happy if you want to have ultimate sales. The products have to improve people's lives. Eventually you're going to see more benevolence from technology because the more the corporations continue to merge (which is natural) and get involved on governmental levels, it has to know what it's doing. And it will eventually become more efficient. Efficiency is not always humanistic, as anyone who has studied history knows. But in this case efficiency will lead to something more humanistic. This is largely because some beings at the upper levels of the major corporations—and certainly the individuals in the sinister secret government—know that eventually trade and sales are going to take place between this world and other planets. And the business world wants to be positioned correctly for the time when they will sell Earth products to extraterrestrials and the people of this planet begin buying products created on other planets. They also know that the benevolent extraterrestrials you're soon going to be in contact with will not encourage or even allow such sales unless your governments agree to a certain standard of humanistic practices.

You will begin to realize that if you want to make money or even have influence, you must bring up your standards as well as the quality of life of people around you to get the ET contracts, because the people in the extraterrestrial trade organizations you'll be dealing with have certain philosophical standards, and they won't sell you things you want to sell to the public unless you act in a certain way. So you are arriving at the time when you will realize that many practices that might have seemed benevolent on the surface were not in the end. Those practices on other planets have been basically eliminated through interaction with other races from other planets. You're easing into that right now, and there's no stopping it. Once that's settled, things are gradually going to get better, but you won't notice this initially in this country for probably another fifteen years or so. People who are paying attention will notice it now, but others won't begin to acknowledge it until they have to.

ET Escapees from Underground

Supposedly there were three beings in Brazil (humanoid ETs). Three young girls saw one of them. And it was reported that one or two of them were in the hospital. We think they were dead. Can you tell us anything about that?

Remember what I said before about a lot of beings who are being shocked to the surface? To some extent what's also going on is that some ETs are escaping from underground. There's a lot of breakdown in the sinister secret government's authority underground because they're going through a radical shift; they're gradually legitimizing. And there's a breakdown in power underground. A lot of beings are really ETs, and people who have been keeping control of them are . . . well, it's just sort of a breakdown of power, and a lot of ETs are now able to escape to the surface. When they get to the surface, if they remember how (if they haven't been down there too long), are calling to be rescued. But they don't have the sophistication to know who's a friend and who's a foe. So not all of these beings are getting off of ships. This is why sometimes when people come across these beings there is no evidence of a ship having been there, because they have come up to the surface out of dimensional doorways—or in some rare cases, actual physical doorways. This was a case in which beings came up from underground.

Were they all killed?

Two of them are in what I'd call a dormant stage, meaning that they're not actually dead. Let's put it this way: One of them is now unable to get back into its body and will move on, on the soul level. One is in a dormant stage and might not (75% probability) get back into its body. One, I believe, has a pretty fair chance of being rescued.

Why were they held underground? What was the purpose? Where are they from?

SSG Kidnapped ETs for Biological Experiments, Now Releasing Them

About twelve years ago the sinister secret government developed means by which they could tap into underground bases of benevolent ETs; they couldn't drill holes there. By using dimensional doorways (they have that technology), they could reach through a doorway, grab somebody and use them for their nasty purposes.

As a basis for cloning?

Yes, and for biological experimentation and everything else nasty. This is what they have been doing. Within the past ten years (especially the past six) it's become obvious to a lot of people that there have been mass evacuations of extraterrestrials living underground. Underground civilizations have moved off temporarily to return later. That's why; they weren't safe because the sinister secret government (SSG) has that ability. But the SSG is no longer grabbing beings because now they realize that these extraterrestrials are going to be our future customers. Now that the SSG is legitimizing, they are confused about what to do with the people they've grabbed, whose extraterrestrial governments (for lack of a better term) have demanded, requested or required their return. So in some underground areas of the SSG they are releasing the beings, hoping to curry favor from the ETs. The people who were assigned to guard these beings feel like, "Why should we bother? This isn't working out. Every man for himself" and so on. They're just letting people go. But the word has gone out by the SSG not to harm any ETs or otherworldly visitors and to try their best to help them get repatriated, as it were.

What star system or civilizations are they from?

Several civilizations. I'll tick off a few: Andromeda Pleiades, Orion, in three cases Zeta Reticuli and in one case Antares, several from Sirius. The list goes on.

Where were the ETs who showed up in Brazil from, one of whom was taken to a hospital? There was a drawing of one in a UFO magazine.

I think these beings are from Sirius.

Negative Sirians or . . . ?

No, no. They were not negative beings.

That's great. This relates to where our civilization's going in the next fifty years.

Remote Viewers' View of the Future

Material seems to be circulating about the government doing a lot of remote viewing. The scientists who have projected into the year 2000 have seen that then only 20% of the population is left on this planet, and it looks totally different. I am curious—is this 3.0 dimension? Does this not concern us?

Thank you. That's a good question. This basically has to do with a potential future. This bleak outlook (20% of the people left and worldwide disasters decimating the population) is still a possibility, as I've said before—but not much. I don't think that's your version of your planet. Most likely this is something that happens at 3.0 or possibly 3.1. Now, for those who are seeing a benevolent future yet only 20% of the current population (which is still quite a few folks), this might be something at the 4.0 dimension or beyond. So it depends largely on what scientists and remote viewers are seeing. If they're seeing something chaotic and miserable, and perhaps beings who do not actually look human, they're definitely seeing 3.0, where the formerly negative Sirians are living. On the other hand, if it's benevolent, it's at a higher dimension. Allowing for where you're going in the next fifty years or so, it could be you, but only if it's reasonably benevolent.

Inevitability of Birth Control

Now, there's something I haven't said, and I have to bring this up. I've sort of hinted around about it before, but this question stimulates it. Is it likely, people have asked, that there will be restrictions on the birth rate in the future? It is not only likely, but you can count on it. I'm not saying, have kids now before it's too late.

This falls into alignment with people being unable to give birth because the planet has too many people on it (we've discussed that before). It also falls into the realm of necessity from a corporate viewpoint, because the corporate-model government will begin to realize that there are too many people. They're not going to put you in boxcars and send you off to camps, but if people stopped having children for 25 or 30 years, there would be a radical but natural decrease in population. Chances are, there will be a control on future population, but not as rigid or as harshly enforced as in the People's Republic of China. It would be a similar model, only not as harshly enforced, where a couple, if they are potent, will be allowed to have no more than one child. That's likely—count on that. And it might also be that for 10, 15, 20 years even, couples will not be allowed to have any children. I don't want to say how, but it will be possible to do that without coming into your bedroom and saying, "You sleep in separate beds."

The potential of a drastically lower population is there because there are too many people here, and Mother Earth will eventually summon her reserves when it comes to her immune system, which is simply microbes. If she summons 5000 microbes, you're going to have 5000 new diseases. Science isn't ready for that, so you need to be okay with the idea that births will become rare and that children are a valuable treat.

The remote viewers saw that there were probably all kinds of diseases that would wipe people out, so I suppose that's 3.0.

I think so. I believe it can be that. We talked about this before, did we not, when you were pushing 3.47? If enough people come to believe that those diseases will be virulent, it could still happen, but it doesn't have to. The option is available for the population to be reduced in benevolent ways.

In the long run, but not by the year 2000.

I know. I'd say it's the lower dimension. I'm going to stand on that; I'm not going to budge off of that.

Frog Mutations and Toxic Wastes

Also, there's these mutated frogs that have been discovered in Minnesota that physicists and scientists are very upset about, thinking that this is a result of ultra-violet rays. Is this a microcosm of what might happen at 3.0 dimension?

I can't talk about that at length, but that isn't at 3.0; that's happening right here in your reality. It has to with exposure to toxic wastes. A lot of frogs spend time underground. If you search around enough, you'll find serious toxic wastes there. On the spiritual level, it's a warning. Some things just cannot continue now (in terms of technology) because you don't have the capacity to deal with the wastes—obviously, certain chemical and biological weapons and certain technologies. So the whole experience of needing to have a more sacred relationship with the garden and the animals there or with farms and the animals there (insects, as you call them) is essential.

I think other work has been done here; I don't need to add to it. You can find out what to do. If you're going to produce poisons and they're going to run off into places, they're going to affect human life and human birth and other life, too. And frogs, who are very spiritual beings, are going to be inclined to show you what's coming if you don't do something. Frogs, I might add, are one of the few beings who are willing to commit mass public suicide, and they have done it before. You see them hop out on the highways and you can't avoid them—that's mass suicide. That's always them saying, "You've got to stop what you're doing. You've got to start living in a more sacred way." That's the basic spiritual message. Obviously, it's possible for science inadvertently or even intentionally to create highly poisonous substances. But you don't have to try and create them. They're out there in the natural state of being.

So there are many beings around that also have mutations, but we're not aware of them yet?

Beings?

I mean animals that live underground or are there often. Frogs aren't the only animals that this is happening to?

That's true. It could happen to human beings. What I'm really saying is that Mother Earth has the ability to produce toxic substances. Please don't feel like you have to emulate that level of creationism. But yes, if you're asking, "Are potential birth defects in a large sense possible in the animal kingdom as well as the human world?" Certainly. But why have it?—just change. I know it sounds ridiculously simple to say and highly complex to do, but as your world becomes more connected, more interconnected, it's not going to be bureaucratic. You will make a decision at the top and it will go all the way from the top to the bottom in a couple of weeks. It can be applied. It's true, dioxin has been buried; they tried to hide it. "Oh, shove it in the ground. We won't see it. It won't be on the surface; it won't harm us." But everyone knows, Earth is a living organism, where things are always moving around. At some point you're going to have to go find it, dig it up, transform it. You might need to find really spiritual people to transform it or you might have to go park it on the Moon for a while until you can transform it.

So this must mean that there's a lot of toxic stuff up there in Minnesota.

Well you know, any state with some wide open spaces in the past forty years (of course, there are fewer wide open spaces in Minnesota now) or even twenty years ago would be highly susceptible to the burial or, more likely, the dumping of toxic waste. And I'm certainly not ruling out radioactive toxic waste. This has more to do with conventional things, as well as a spiritual message from the frogs.

Computer Chips in Prisoners

I think you covered everything very well. We're really saying not to look at all these fear-based things that are coming across. I got several memos that apparently were lifted from the files of a major computer company that mention research regarding a chip that they're putting in prisoners that enable them to control them completely.

That's real.

The implication is, once they're tested on the prisoners, God knows who else they're going to implant.

That is real. This was envisioned by others and it's true; it's coming. It is a very small group of prisoners they're putting them into, not everybody. It's an experiment that you have to expect. They've got these for animals already. "Oh, put that in your animal. Mark it with everything and then go someplace." We've discussed this. Yes, that's real, that's coming. I don't think you can stop it.

But they're not going to put it in all the people?

I think eventually they will. It will probably be installed at birth. In a lot of ET civilizations you have this.

But this isn't just to mark people to find them. This is for total control. They can put you to sleep for 22 hours.

Yeah, but that is not going to happen.

They can turn you off completely.

That might happen. You want this technology to be applied as lightly as possible. Let it happen (eventually, not now). It's very likely that in the long run all prisoners will have this implanted. However, it is possible that once they complete their sentences, including parole, it will be removed. That's real possible; it's being researched for that. But will this particular kind of chip go into the general public? I don't think so.

Good.

I do think that there will eventually be a chip of some sort that will be used for the general public. Not just for tracking, but for other purposes—basically the ultimate mini-Social Security card that will have lots of information about you. I don't think you're going to be able to avoid that one. Now, it's possible you might if it doesn't happen for 25 years, but I think it's coming sooner than that.

It will be an opportunity to employ magic (true magic) because some of you might have to get past it. But in terms of going into prisoners—oh, yes. They'll have to get some of the bugs out of it. But yes, I think it's really going to happen. Ultimately it will be used for benevolent purposes for prisoners—to keep them from fighting with each other. It will make them more docile, true. It's frightening, but it will be sufficiently frightening and controversial in intellectual circles, to say nothing of religious circles, that I don't think there will be any chance of that particular chip in that form being used in the body of the average citizen. It will get a lot of publicity by simply getting put into prisoners. It is possible that even after they finish parole they might not have the technology to get the darned thing out. That's what's going to create a lot of the controversy.

Well, this one they can. They can take it out under cover of just sending somebody over for a medical exam or something. This was three or four pages of what alleges to be a secret, confidential, eyes-only memo that somebody mailed in a plain white envelope.

I think that it is a project on a very small scale now that is in application because the technology exists. I think that ultimately the device will, in the case of prisoners, be put someplace where it would be difficult to remove. Ultimately it will probably be implanted at the base of the skull or someplace like that, where you can't get rid of it without killing yourself. They don't have the technology that involves simply putting a collar around your neck. But for what it's worth, the actual intentions are benevolent. It will get enough publicity, believe me—worldwide—to prevent its widespread application as a control mechanism for the civilization.

Good.

Nonlethal Weapons Testing on the Public

I want to talk about something briefly. Ever since the 1700s and the 1800s, in the early days of law enforcement those who have acted as police have wanted a weapon that would be practical but not lethal. Especially in modern-day policing you'll find that fully 40% of the most dangerous calls are domestic disturbances. And if husbands and wives are fighting, the last thing in the world the police want to do is go in and shoot somebody. But it's surprising how often somebody gets shot or is terribly injured.

So for years the police have been saying, "When are we going to have something we can actually use?" For a time they thought they had it with a little electric gun, but it wasn't practical for many reasons.

It is interesting that in circles where one would least expect it there is great interest in nonlethal weaponry—in the military. So there is a market in the police community and potentially in the military community. The idea is basically to apply electronic warfare to more mundane situations or smaller skirmishes.

I bring this up briefly because it is beginning to be overwhelming. You all know that electronic and electromagnetic pollution are out of hand. Not only are there microwave generators in every house, but you've got satellites blasting you with microwaves! I might add that fully 40% of the aggravated cancers are largely stimulated by electropollution and/or microwave radiation. I'm not talking about skin cancers or cancers that show up at the end of a natural life cycle, but cancers that are aggravated and become inflamed.

As if that were not enough, weapons tests are being done on unsuspecting individuals, meaning the testing is done largely on the mass public. Granted, it isn't done in New York City or Washington, D.C. (although there have been a few experiments in Washington). It is generally done in the areas of small towns accessible by underground or clandestine bases.

This has been going on in Sedona for a while and certainly in many other spots. This testing has been done mainly in the West—in Texas, Oklahoma, Wyoming, Montana, Oregon, Washington, California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Colorado and Idaho. There have been exceptions, such as the tests in southern Florida and an outrageous amount of testing on the nonvolunteers of Cuba. You'd be surprised what your government—or more often the case, government contractors—does under the guise of nondestructive testing.

I bring this up because it is time to decide how much defense is too much. The idea of a nonlethal weapon is terrific, but it ought to be tested on volunteer subjects. I see no reason why prison inmates shouldn't be paid or compensated in some way for this hazardous work. It's outrageous that they are often paid with a brief furlough from prison. There ought to be something more for them because prisons are terrible enough already. And they are outrageous in their concept; if you want to separate people from society, that's fine, but you don't have to send them to concentration camps.

Electronic Warfare and Mind Manipulation Must Be Stopped

I support nonlethal weapons, but I am not keen on the way they're being developed. There is no question that the sinister secret government applies electronic warfare to the manipulation of people's thoughts and feelings.

You all watch these shows like Star Trek. It's one thing to have a hand-held self-protection device that immobilizes someone without injury. They basically go to sleep and then wake up. I'm all for that. But it's another thing to ask: "How can we manipulate the public so they will follow no matter what we say or do?"

While I fully support the development of nonlethal weapons to be substituted in situations where lethal weapons would have been used, I do not support the methodology for the testing. And I would like to see you as citizens do something about it. Those of you who want to work on the spiritual level, excellent. But even if you don't work on the spiritual level, write your Congressmen. They might feel powerless as individuals, but if you get enough of them to petition the Defense Department or the Attorney General's Office, something will be done. The main thing is, let's stop testing mind-manipulation devices on the unsuspecting, involuntary public. And for those who do volunteer, let's see that they are properly and justly rewarded.

Can you be specific about what devices we're talking about?

Basically, electromagnetic devices and even extra-low-frequency (ELF) devices. As a result of extensive research in neurochemistry, these devices are known to affect the body's hormonal system and secretions or electrical stimulations within the brain. Much of this research has been not only to discover the feel-good pill (which I've mentioned before), but to lead to a way to control people in a nonviolent way so that the people will be nonviolent. And while that seems very benevolent on the surface and the goals were initially justifiable, there has been an outrageous amount of manipulation and testing on the general public. The problem is, when private industry develops such things, there is a tendency for a lot of mischief to take place.

Your Group Conflicts Are Meant to Solve Unsolvable Conflicts

So I am all for nonlethal weaponry, but I'm not for mind manipulation—and I am certainly not for microwave and electropollution. It is necessary, I understand, as you're going through this stage to clear up the unresolved issues of your creation. Let's look at things in the larger picture, as I like to do—for instance, the wars and struggles between certain nationalistic groups and religious groups over the years. Instead of Catholics and Protestants (as in Ireland), let's change it to Martians and Venusians. The minute we change that perspective, we understand that one of the reasons you have so many fragmented social or religious structures is because the ultimate intention is to create methods of peace for unsolvable conflicts that have occurred on other planets and other cultures. When something is unsolvable in a place where conflict is not allowed but basic conflict has been demonstrated, outsiders will step in and resolve the issue with a benign police force, saying, "We will seek to have this resolved elsewhere and we'll apprise you of the solution so you can apply the solution with your people." You might ask, "How is peace kept in the universe?" This is ultimately the answer when there are individuals who might be inclined toward arguments or violence.

Ultimately that's the direction you're going here—moving toward a policing force that will use nonlethal weapons and say to people (even warring groups), "You clearly can't resolve this. We're going to work on this resolution somehow, but for now we're going to have peace here. That's how it's going to be." It might be hard to imagine that people will say okay. But they learn that they're not being ignored, that someone's just cause is not being cast aside and that resolution will be accomplished someplace.

Now, Earth is a place where resolution is being striven for. In another context, that's the future of law enforcement, even between two individuals who have perfectly just causes from their points of view. Someone's going to come along and say, "I'm sorry, but you're not allowed to fight. Not only are you hurting each other, but your anger and your battle is affecting others. We're going to put a stop to it. A resolution will be created and given to you to work out." Thus law enforcement is gradually going to evolve into becoming what it was always intended to be: peace officers. That's it.